Mayor Says No to Road in Elmwood

By HEDI HERMANSON

The answer is no.

A proposed road through Elmwood Park will not be built, but the city's plans to implement its park improvement program will proceed, Mayor P.J. Morgan told a crowd of more than 350 people Tuesday at St. Margaret Mary Catholic School auditorium.

"I have reached a conclusion that we should no longer discuss the possibility of putting a road through the western part of Elmwood," Morgan said.

His statement was followed by cheers and applause from the majority of the crowd, many of whom were Elmwood-area residents.

The proposed road would have provided access from UNO to Pacific Street.

Although there had been some support for a road, the majority of area residents opposed it, Morgan said.

Saying his first priority was "enhancement of the park for users of the park and their safety," Morgan unveiled his $600,000 renovation plan for Elmwood.

The plan, which is scheduled to begin in the Spring, includes:

- Removing a road along the creek and building parking lots.
- Landscaping, including a series of meadows.
- A new playground and additional picnic areas.
- Converting a five-way intersection into a four-way.
- Winterizing gazebos to make them usable year round.

"We need more green space and less gray space," said Larry Foster, city parks administrator who presented the plan. "This plan will give us a 15-percent increase in green space."

Student President/Regent Jennifer Newhouse told the mayor that by failing to support the road, the community was sending UNO students "mixed messages."

The specific intent of the road was to reduce traffic, she said.

"I am for park improvement, but the university doesn't need to be sacrificed as far as parking and its needs," Newhouse said. "The community needs to understand that UNO is a vital part of the city as a whole."

"If you want to retain UNO graduates, you're going to have to first allow them to successfully complete their education. By making it inconvenient for students to get to campus, you're not aiding their cause at all."

A letter from UNO Chancellor Del Weber to Morgan was distributed at the meeting. The letter said the plan for the road "would have been good for everyone," but it did not have enough support, and therefore, UNO would have to begin to explore other options for long term needs such as parking and related issues.

Rising enrollment in future years will cause problems, said UNO spokesman Lou Cartier.

Charity Scams Increasing

By KATHARINE STOLTZFUS

The Nebraska Attorney General's Office is warning consumers to think twice before writing out that next check to their favorite charitable organization.

In the state and across the nation "look-alike charities" are angling for donation dollars, said Dan Parsons, senior consumer specialist in the attorney general's office.

Parsons said look alike charities, organizations who adopt names similar to those of reputable charities, are becoming more prevalent.

Often, the look-alikes target people who have given to reputable charities in the past either via direct mail or telemarketing calls.

"Their direct mail pieces are made to look identical to another group," Parsons said. "When you get it in the mail, most people are oblivious to whether it's a different organization or not. They make out the check and send it in thinking it's their own charity that they always give to and it turns out that it's not."

In one recent scam, several Omahans were indicted by a federal grand jury as part of "Operation Disconnect," a FBI crackdown on illicit telemarketing operations. Cheryl Lynn Patterson, her husband Robert W. Patterson and son, Ryan Patterson Strum are charged with aiding and abetting wire fraud.

The Pattersons operated Say No Now, a look-alike telemarketing company in California before relocating to Omaha where they ran a telemarketing firm located at 3035 S. 72nd St. At various times, the company represented itself as Save Our Children, Community Concern and the National Children's Alliance.

Parsons stressed that not all look-alikes

Forum Gives Voice to Concerns

By SUSAN McELIGOTT

Enrollment of multicultural students at UNO has increased continually, according to statistics presented Wednesday at a multicultural forum.

"We've seen a great increase this year in African-American enrollment," said Mary Mudd, assistant vice chancellor of student developmental services.

Mudd said that in the last year, there was also an increase in Native American enrollment.

"We've been doing a good job of attracting students of color to UNO," Mudd said. "We're recruiting them, but are we retaining them?"

She said she was concerned with providing support services, faculty support and student activities to encourage multicultural students to remain in school and be successful.

About 30 students and faculty members attended the forum, which was requested by the University of Nebraska Board of Regents, to listen and express concerns and comment about multicultural issues at UNO.

Mudd, moderator of the discussion, explained that the information gathered through the forum would be reported to the Board of Regents later in the semester.

Many of the students said there was a communication gap between students and faculty advisers, which results in students wasting time and money on classes they don't need.

Some also said they encountered communication problems with offices such as financial aid.

"Students need to know they will be welcomed and be given correct information when they need help," Mudd said.

A few Native American students were concerned about the lack of focus on Native American history and culture on campus, and the fact there are no Native American professors at UNO.

Yvonne Crockett, director of Project ACHIEVE, a program for disabled first generation college students, said "We're not getting a lot of multicultural student representation."

Crockett encouraged students of color to see if they are eligible for the services the program offers.

"We're dedicated to working with students in tutoring, remedial courses and counseling," she said.

Mudd said students of color need to be made aware of the variety of services available to

Royal to Help Blind Through Running

By KARMA J.C. CAMPHOR

On Oct. 31, Mike Royal, a UNO graduate student who thinks of himself as just a regular guy and does not want to sell himself short because of his visual impairment, will take part in The Chicago Marathon.

At age 5 Royal was diagnosed with retinitis pigmentosa, a hereditary condition affecting the peripheral parts of the retina. The disease progressed over the years and by age 18, Royal was considered legally blind.

Royal has completed marathons in Omaha, Boston, Minneapolis and St. Paul, Minn. This upcoming marathon will be his first in Chicago. To prepare for the marathon, Royal has been running hills, tracks and distance runs for the past four months. Royal said he started running after graduating from high school both for the enjoyment and to stay in shape.

"When a person says they cannot run 26.2 miles, that person is actually saying they cannot train themselves to do that," Royal said. "If a person plans well and applies themselves, they could be very surprised at what is accomplished."

Because Royal still has some central vision he is able to run most of the race without help.

Due to the large crowds present at both the start and the finish of a marathon, Royal said he usually begins and ends a marathon with the help of a guide, but is able to run the majority on his own.

Royal is also the current president of the Nebraska-Iowa affiliate of the National Retinitis Pigmentosa Foundation as well as one of its founding members. Royal said he hopes to increase public awareness of retinitis pigmentosa which affects more than 100,000 Americans.

Several fundraisers supported Royal and his efforts in the marathon. According

New Birth Control Ready to Hit Market

By KATHARINE STOLTZFUS

While women may have to wait a few years for the release of the male birth control pill, there are several new birth control options now on the market or currently undergoing clinical trials.

Montie Shellenberger, a nurse-midwife at the University of Nebraska Medical Center's obstetrics and gynecology department, called the first new birth control pill formulation in eight years "a whole new area of progestins."

The new combination pills marketed by Ortho and Organon pharmaceutical companies are based on new synthetic progestins that are effective at lower dosages than traditional pills. According to Shellenberger, the new pills may also be less likely to cause cardiovascular complications.

"My experience with them is they seem to be a little better and have fewer side effects," said Dr. William Orr, associate clinical professor at the Med Center and physician on staff at the Womens Services Planning Clinic. Orr said he has noticed less weight gain and bloating with the new pill, but cautioned that because they have been on the market such a short time, "I don't think we could definitely say they are superior to the others."

Following the release of the injectable contraceptive Depo-Provera earlier this year, two new injectables, Cyclofem and Mesigyna are now undergoing trials. The new formulas are expected to be as effective as Depo-Provera which is administered by shot every three months while eliminating some of its side effects, Orr said.

"In my understanding of them, they are an estrogen and not a progesterone. The reason for the development of these is to try to get away from some of the side effects of Depo-Provera. The Depo-Provera can cause some delay in the resumption of ovulation once you stop it and if you wanted to get are fraudulent.

"Another group could be giving some of the money to charity while the Pattersons kept all the money themselves.

"We're certainly not suggesting that all of these charities are scams. Some of them may very well give a portion of that money to some kind of charity. What I think we're urging consumers to do is to just be aware that this is taking place."

Parsons cited the Cancer Fund of America, a look alike charity based in Tennessee, as an example of an organization that operates within the law.

"They've been in operation for many years and they try to operate within the legal limits of the law, but what we have to suggest to consumers is be aware of how they're spending their money. They aren't spending their money probably as wisely as some of the other cancer associations are."

A group calling itself Heart Support of America is soliciting donations in Nebraska, Iowa and several other midwestern states, said Amy Friedman, communications director for the Nebraska affiliate of the American Heart Association.

Although only a small percentage of the total funds raised go to charitable activities, Friedman said the organization is perfectly legal.

"The mailings are continuing in Nebraska," Friedman said.

Nebraska has no statute governing the minimum percentage a charity must put towards their charitable programs, but the Council of Better Business Bureaus has established recommended guidelines. According to these standards, at least 50 percent of public contributions should be spent on the programs and activities described in a solicitation while no more than 35 percent should be spent on fundraising.

Parsons and Friedman agreed that it is easy for organizations and marketers to buy mailing lists of people who regularly give to charities and urged consumers to use caution when solicited for a donation.

"This is a problem in that the public really needs to do a little homework before they make a philanthropic gift," Friedman said. "They need to find out if the group they're going to be giving the money to meets the public's standards as to how they use the money. Certainly the amount of money that goes towards fundraising should be looked at."

Parsons said it is important for consumers to recognize that "there's more and more demand for your charitable monies and you need to try to educate yourself and know first of all what the group is that you're giving to and secondly, how they are spending your money."

Clark's Status In Question

Danny Clark a UNO student charged with the alleged stabbing of UNO graduate student John Sharkey on Oct. 6 was ordered to stand trial Tuesday after waiving his right to a preliminary hearing.

Clark, who is charged with first-degree assault for the stabbing in the Health, Physical Education and Recreation Building, has been free on $10,000 bail since Oct. 13.

Due to student privacy regulations, Vice Chancellor of Educational and Student Services Richard Hoover said his office cannot release any information regarding the status of Clark's enrollment at UNO.

According to Rita Henry, assistant to Hoover, Clark probably will be brought in to Hoover's office for a disciplinary review.

If Hoover finds Clark guilty of the charge, he may be given a written reprimand, disciplinary probation, suspension or expulsion.

According to the UNO student handbook, a student can appeal a decision by Hoover to an appeals board. A student can also appeal a decision from the appeals board, but only if the student's right to proper due process has been violated.

Symphonic Band Ready for Musicians

The music department is looking for students who are interested in performing with the UNO Symphonic Band.

James R. Sawyer, assistant director of bands, will conduct the group which is scheduled to perform two concerts in the spring.

The first meeting will be at 1 p.m., Nov. 9, in the Strauss Performing Arts Building, Room 109. Students who register now can receive credit for participation.

Instruments will be provided if needed and no audition is necessary.

For more information, call 554-3602.

Master Series to Open With Low and Swoboda

Friends of Art will present "Romantic Fall Encounter" at 7 p.m. Sunday at the UNO Art Gallery in the Fine Arts Building.

Cellist David Low and pianist Jonathon Swoboda will be the featured artists for the first of the four-part Music and Masters series benefiting the Friends of Art Scholarship Fund. Compositions by Paganini, Beethoven, Brahms and others will be accompanied with a discussion by art historian Martin Rosenberg on related works by Ingres, Delacroix and other Romantic period artists.

Admission is $15 for the event and $55 for the series. For reservations, call 554-2796.

Tuition Waiver Nearing Application Deadline

The deadline for those wishing to apply for the Graduate Regents' Tuition Waiver for spring 1994, is Nov. 18. Applications can be picked up at the Graduate Studies office, Eppley Administration Building, Room 204.

Rats in Space Lose Heads Hypocrisy Rules in U.S.

"Space... the final frontier!" That was the battle cry yelled from the government-funded rooftops at the National Aeronautics and Space Administration (NASA) back in the 1950s. From that point on, the U.S. has led the way in space exploration.

We were the first to send a broken $2 billion space telescope into the great unknown; the first to lose a $1 billion Mars Observer space probe; the first to lose a $228 million Landsat Earth observation satellite; and now, if everything goes right (Ha! Ha!), the U.S. will be the first to decapitate a rat in space.

Seven astronauts blasted off Monday in the space shuttle Columbia for 14 catheter-filled days of fun in a motionless paradise. Oh, yeah, I almost forgot, they're bringing a fresh batch of RATS with them — 48, to be exact.

During the mission, the astronauts will be jabbing, prodding, punching, poking, digging, and probing the rats; in the name of science. They will take blood samples, inject radioactive isotopes, and collect the animals' droppings.

The Big Finale comes on the eve of Halloween when some of the rats will be beheaded by a miniature guillotine. Yes, it's that famous chopping machine made famous during the French Revolution. But this guillotine is a handsome hand-crafted pint-sized replica of the original. They'll put the itty-bitty rat heads in place, and then a Deathsman (actually, a G.I. Joe in a pointy hood) will pull the string. OUCH!

The rats that do survive this death trip will be killed for dissection once the shuttle lands back on earth.

I'm not sure WHAT to make of all this. Sure, NASA's procedures are grotesque and brutal, not to mention, COSTLY. Just how much tax money did it take to develop and build this tiny guillotine? I asked a biology professor about the rat guillotine concept, and he said this:

"I understand their (NASA's) need to kill the rats in some other way besides gas or injection, because of contamination to the rats, but why the guillotine? In our labs, we just put an old number 2 pencil on the rat's neck and then give its tail a good yank. The end result is basically the same; except there's a lot more gooky stuff (scientific lingo for 'displeasing liquid matter') when you use a guillotine."

Are rat executions in space cruel and unusual punishment to animals? Probably. But if knocking off a couple of rats can help some five-year-old with leukemia live past the age of 6, then I'm all for it.

I think it's quite interesting (And this is a small digression; but isn't that what Fridays are for?) to note that the rat mutilations are government funded. This is the same government that last month put a FLY on the endangered species list. That's right, on Sept. 22, 1993, for the first time in the 20-year history of the Endangered Species Act, the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service extended FEDERAL PROTECTION to the Delhi Sands flower-loving fly.

Under the Endangered Species Act, no one is allowed to "kill, harm, or harass a plant or animal in danger of extinction." That means you better think twice before swatting one of these little boogers. And NO HARASSING either! They'll be no, "Hey, cutie-fly, those sure are sexy wings you have there." That can get you a fine of up to $20,000 and one year in jail.

Let's try to make sense of all this. We've got mad scientists up in space (riding along in a gazillion-dollar spacecrate) chopping up perfectly good rats by the dozens. Then, down on Earth, our government spends precious tax dollars protecting the various plants and animals that have become "endangered." Most recently, a fly—and for what? Why are we so set on making everything live forever? Things die. Things become extinct (ask Vanilla Ice). That's Nature. We're only putting off the inevitable.

Even '60s guru Timothy Leary has gotten caught up in the fantasy by having his brain frozen (upon his death) in hopes that someday he can be brought back to life. Leary is so senile that he doesn't have enough wit left in him to realize that whatever intelligence he had in his brain is still back in the '60s floating on an LSD wave.

I'm not being pessimistic; I'm being honest. We are so afraid of DEATH, we end up stumbling through life wondering, "What's it going to be like when I die? Will it hurt?" As if it was some big mystery.

It's just a matter of looking in a mirror. What's death like? Ask yourself, we invented it.

Though I've never had a child, I know that when I do, I will want its father in the delivery room with me.

Maybe it's because my father tells me about my birth all the time. Maybe it's because, according to rumor, childbirth is painful. Maybe it's because the family unit has been slighted the last few years by the changing demands of our society.

Judging on the controversy over Houston Oiler David Williams' choice to stay with his wife during labor and miss a game Sunday against the New England Patriots, the club does not join me in this sentiment.

Williams, an offensive right tackle for the team, choose to stay with his wife for the birth of their first child. In doing so, he missed the road trip to Foxboro for a game the Oilers wound up losing.

Though Williams has received support from Oilers fans, those in the club's office see his move as letting down his teammates and fans.

The results of the game are not the issue. What is important is the apathy the club has had towards the birth of this child. Scot Cooper Williams was brought into this world and his father was fined because of placing his family first.

What's wrong with this picture? While the corporate right complains about the lack of dedication to family values, they negated their position by condemning one man for the choice of family before anything else. This is so indicative of a change in the American value system ... hypocrisy rules.

I'm not waving the flag of Republican "Family Values," as I disagree with that brilliant platform whole heartedly. What I'm trying to get across is that the deterioration of the American family is frightening.

Plain and simple. The ones getting cheated are the children. They are the ones losing their positive role models. They are the ones who will grow up misguided, if not unguided.

It saddens me to think that the attention I got as a child is now a luxury. I know not all children were treated the same way I was. But I would go so far as to say I had the average Mid-American upbringing.

It was something that I expected. It's something all kids should expect. They should not be made to feel like an imposition. Scot Williams should not have to read about how his father had wages held because of his birth 18 years down the line.

We're saving and feeding the people of Somalia and we kicked butt in Iraq.

So what? We can't even treat our own children with the respect they deserve, yet we feel justified in going to other countries to cure their ills.

If in fact Whitney Houston was right (and I do feel obligated to agree) and the children are the future, what does the future have to promise when the past was so dehumanizing?

Children need to be more of a focus in the future. They need to be protected and cherished more than people cherish their cars and money.

How can this country be so proud of itself when there will be somewhere around 80,000 to 1 million children sleeping on the streets tonight.

I look at my niece and the kids in my sister's pre-school class and think about my childhood. I knew when I scraped my knee someone would care.

The lack of attention placed on the family is the direct cause of so many other societal ills like rising crime rates and teenage drug abuse.

Maybe instead of pointing fingers and blaming teachers, law enforcement officials, and the media for family problems, people should look inside their own families.

Maybe, someday, people will actually put family back where it belongs.

Ahead of BMW's and condos. Before the suit and tie. Prior to the corner office and raises.

In the fore front of your heart and thoughts.

pregnant, it might take you a year or so off Depo-Provera before you start having periods."

Orr said that despite the current controversy, RU486, "the abortion pill," will eventually be approved for use in the United States although its use will be strictly regulated and used mainly as a morning-after pill.

"RU486 is not going to be something that will be a really highly used product in this country at all," he said. "It will be approved. It will take a long time and when it gets approved, it will be so heavily restricted and so costly that most people will not be able to afford it."

Shellenberger mentioned Norplant which is implanted underneath the skin and the female condom as two additional options that have been approved in the past year. Shellenberger said she would also like to see the development of a male birth control pill.

"That's what we've been trying to get them to do forever," she said.

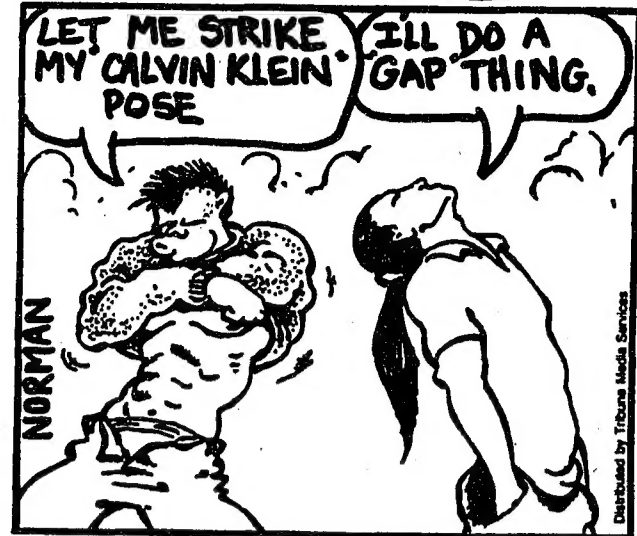

"There's work being done on male contraception," said Orr, who sees a new willingness on the part of men to share birth control responsibilities. "But there's some biology involved that's hard to escape and that is that women get pregnant ... Would you trust a guy to have taken his pill last night?"

Orr said that there is one major stumbling block to developing a male contraceptive.

"The problem in the male is finding something that will interfere with sperm production, but not interfere with sexual drive. A male could take the standard birth control pill that women take and he would not make sperm, but he would have no sex drive and start growing breasts."

SONIC LEAVES

THE GATEWAY'S GUIDE to ENTERTAINMENT

Rory Cochrane (top left), Milla Jovovich (top right) and Jason London (bottom) are three of the featured players in a look at high school in the '70s.

'Dazed' a Relaxing Option

Having a good time is the premise of independent film maker Richard Linklater's new film "Dazed and Confused." Hit-and-run subplots and a cast list longer than the troupe of "Fantasy Island" create a unique viewing experience.

"Dazed and Confused" tells the story of two groups of Middle-America teenagers living out the last day of school in the year 1976. One group is composed of junior high students who will graduate into the world of high school in the coming fall. The main group, however, is juniors who will accept the mantle of seniorship.

"Dazed and Confused" is a fairly simple story of the last great night before the first days of summer. Due to this, no great storyline is ever developed, and neither is a dominating conflict. "Dazed and Confused," however, does illustrate the transition the two groups of students must undergo to grow into the roles they must accept.

Linklater shows this process of transition in a very linear way by flashing from character to character as the day progresses. With over 20 characters to use, however, the audience is required to have a quick eye and sharp mind to keep track of these small, individual changes.

Because of this variety of characters, no one ever really takes on the role of a "hero" or "villain." Instead, almost every character seems to have his own little role in the movie. There is a feminist, a jock, a bully, a wanna-be, a "dead-head," an anarchist and even a nerd. The list goes on and on, making a full listing impossible. There are, however, two slightly more complex characters in the story who help give the movie a bit of adhesiveness.

The first is Mitch, played by Wiley Wiggins. Mitch's conflict is making the jump from a junior high setting into the high school world of "cool" no matter how irresponsible it may be. With his long hair, vacant look and impeccable '70s wardrobe of tie-dies and bell bottoms, Wiggins does an excellent job of showing just how complex and frightening such a change can be. Wiggins' character also helps open a doorway into the past for the older crowd while giving insight into the future for those too young to know the rigors of high school.

The second character of mention is played by Jason London in the role of Pink, a returning quarterback for the football team who is pressured early in the film to sign a pledge implemented by the coach to stay away from drugs and alcohol. Unlike the other players, Pink experiences considerable reluctance to sign such a hypocritical oath in an era when drugs and alcohol were consumed in a much freer state. London manages to drift between conforming and being a rebel in a believable way, giving the picture a bit of morality and dash of believability.

"Dazed and Confused" is not a movie for those control freaks who require a two or three main characters, a strong plot and a big slam-bam climax. This movie is a simple, meandering one, which slowly takes the audience through relaxed sequences of partying and mischief. If you're a relaxed person who wants to have a good time without worrying about global issues, then "Dazed and Confused" is the best option.

See it with a bud.

Sven Shatters Peaceful Day

Sunday is my day to relax.

On Sundays I will lie on my futon, clothed only in a halter top and tube socks, tapping my feet rhythmically to the "Free Willy" soundtrack.

But last week, my peaceful Sunday was brought to an abrupt halt. The phone rang. It was my ex-boyfriend Sven.

For all of you who have just recently tuned in to my column, Sven went out for a pack of cigarettes five months ago, took all of his clean clothes and never returned.

He called last week to say that he was at the bus station and needed a ride home.

After he left me, Sven moved to Des Moines to sell sliced ham door-to-door. He left town with a young sow and a dull knife. While Sven was making a bathroom run at the Gas-N-Shop on the east side of town, the pig ate through her leash and bought a lottery ticket. She won $10,000 on a scratch-off game and took a cab back to Omaha.

Broke and dejected, Sven trudged back home looking for some sympathy.

Well, he's not going to get it from me.

Where was he when I needed him? He wasn't there when I left my checkbook underneath the wall of values at Festival Foods and he didn't cry with me when they cancelled "Knight Rider." So why should I be there for him?

My therapist told me I have only two obligations in life. One was to myself, and the other was to my readers in the Sonic Leaves. With that, I will take Dr. Larsen's advice and speak to my followers in Madame's Mailbag:

Dear Madame:

I'm taking a statistics class, and we're conducting a survey with advice columnists.

If you could be anybody in the world, would you be:

a.) Dick Clark (the man never ages)

b.) Sister Mary Franks, my third grade teacher (the woman never shaves her legs)

c.) Hooch the Dog (he's got the neatest eyes)

-ord.) That creepy toilet paper guy that yells at everybody for squeezing his merchandise.

Signed,

Kimmy Peters

Dear Kimmy:

Well, I'm pleased that you're finally doing your homework. When I was your age, I was kicked out of every boarding school on the western tip of Belgium. Mamsy said I had to be polished, but all I could think about was eating erasers. One day I choked on some chalk dust and had to get my stomach pumped. During my hospital stay, my classroom finally got to clean off the chalkboards.

Well, the clock is at five minutes 'til three in the morning. I've got to get to Festival Foods before they empty the day-old bakery rack.

Until next time, I will leave you with this thought:

C is for cookie. That's good enough for me. Digayvu?

Musicians Spearhead Mission of Peace

Ali McMordie and Robert Hamilton are two Irish musicians trying to end the cycle of violence in Northern Ireland by starting an organization called Peace Together. While the task they've undertaken seems insurmountable, the two are positive they can make a difference.

review by eric johnson

"Within a fortnight, 22 kids were orphaned. That's a common occurrence," Hamilton said in a recent phone interview. "Most of those children saw their parents killed."

According to the organizer, 3,000 people have been killed in the past 25 years due to violence. That's in a population of only 1.3 million people. When Hamilton took the death ratio and plugged it into the population of America, the number of deaths to violence would equal 10,000 over 25 years.

"Your society wouldn't stand for that," he quickly added. "We have definitely turned our backs on the situation. I'm from southern Ireland and, I represent the people who have turned their backs."

Hamilton went on to say the Irish weren't the only ones to blame. He accuses the rest of the world for turning its back on violence.

The first major project Peace Together has undertaken is the release of an album called Peace Together. It is a compilation of English and Irish musicians coming together to record songs that relate to the conflict in Northern Ireland.

Bands such as U2, Therapy and Pop Will Eat Itself lend their efforts to the project. All profits from the album will go to programs helping the youth in Northern Ireland.

Peace Together is hoping to have an effect on the young people in Northern Ireland.

According to Hamilton, the youth in the area are tired of violence and respond by stealing cars and joy riding. This usually results in local factions coming and establishing their own law through events such as knee capping, where someone is shot in the leg for disobeying the law, or local codes.

"The kids are trying to give the finger to those who are in control of the streets," Hamilton said. "They've had enough. They don't want to go that way, but they don't have a choice."

Hamilton and his partner agree that people over the age of 20 are too far gone to help, so they are focusing their efforts on the younger generation.

One project takes 40 impoverished Protestants and Catholics on a two-week holiday where the kids get to know each other. They then meet once a month for a year. The intended effect is to break down the barriers between the two groups and reverse the cycle of religious persecution.

"It's not about bringing peace. We don't believe we can do that," Hamilton said. "It won't work unless those people who live it are equipped to make it happen. Those kids won't involve themselves in paramilitary actions. Those are real results, and that's what this money is going to do."

Peace Together is attempting to prepare the next generation of Northern Irish to slowly end the deep segregation present in cities like Belfast. Currently, the city is covered by invisible boundaries called "peace lines" dividing the Protestant and Catholic sections of the city. According to Hamilton, Catholic workers are discriminated against in a Protestant work situation. He said the government is trying to change the situation, but it is hard because of the "deep-rooted hatred" in the country.

Peace Together has already seen some results from their efforts and hope to make more progress in the future. In the end, it will be up to the Irish people to determine if this campaign works. So far, according to Hamilton, the response is very positive.

THEATRE

review by ed scastny

The Jim Rose Circus Sideshow, a one-ring display of human oddities, made Omaha its second stop in its 33-city tour.

The sideshow members stuck spoons in their nasal cavities, hung irons from their ears and swallowed broken glass as they captivated a crowd of nearly 400.

Jim Rose and Co. recently toured with Perry Farrell's Lollapalooza festival and shot a few spots for MTV's Haunted House special, which will air on Halloween.

In a pre-show interview just two hours after he had returned from tongue surgery at Methodist Hospital, Rose talked about the toned-down MTV special.

"It's going to be really tame," he said. "They won't be showing any of the better stuff. MTV's like Sesame Street with a rock and roll beat."

Rose began performing in grade school, when he wrote ghost stories and performed them in class. Propelled from that success, he went touring to other schools and performed his scripts.

FROM FREAKS, PAGE 3X

By the mid '80s, Rose was doing his own freak act at a Middle Eastern restaurant with belly dancers. The event grew in popularity and began drawing people from hundreds of miles away. Within nearly a year, the sideshow formed with a cast of Rose, Matt "The Tube" Crowley, Bebe the Circus Queen, The Amazing Mr. Lifto, the omni-tattooed Enigma and The Torture King. The six then embarked upon their first tour together.

While in Amsterdam promoting a sold-out performance, Rose consumed five light bulbs in the course of a day. He collapsed in his hotel room and was rushed to the hospital for treatment for severe stomach cramps and bleeding bowels. His system was only used to consuming one light bulb every 24 hours.

But Rose isn't the only one making news.

A few weeks ago, Enigma, who is tattooed from scalp to sole with interlocked jigsaw puzzle pieces, broke a world's record by having 17 tattoo artists work on his flesh at once. The artists were filling in some of his puzzle pieces with blue dye, and Enigma's goal is to have every other piece filled with blue.

The sideshow is now headed for Chicago, where they will play two sold-out shows at the Cabaret Metro.

If you missed the show on Monday, you can still catch a sideshow video available at Homer's records. The tape is 35 minutes long and was shot entirely at Moore Theater in Seattle in February.

Another option for the human oddity fan is Mike Strange's House of Freaks, a show held throughout October in the cellar of the Old Market's Firehouse Dinner Theater.

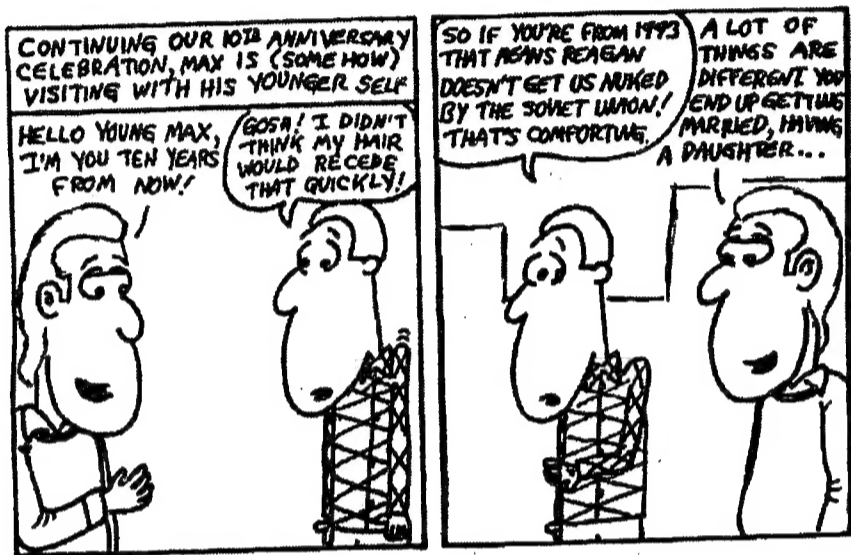

The curator of the Scream in the Dark Production said that his show is based heavily on Rose's. In fact, many of Strange's performers attended Rose's Sideshow Monday night.

Strange's collection of bizarrely talented youths perform 20 minute shows of bug eating, tongue piercing, floss snorting and nasal cavity cramming that will adequately besquirm the squeamish.

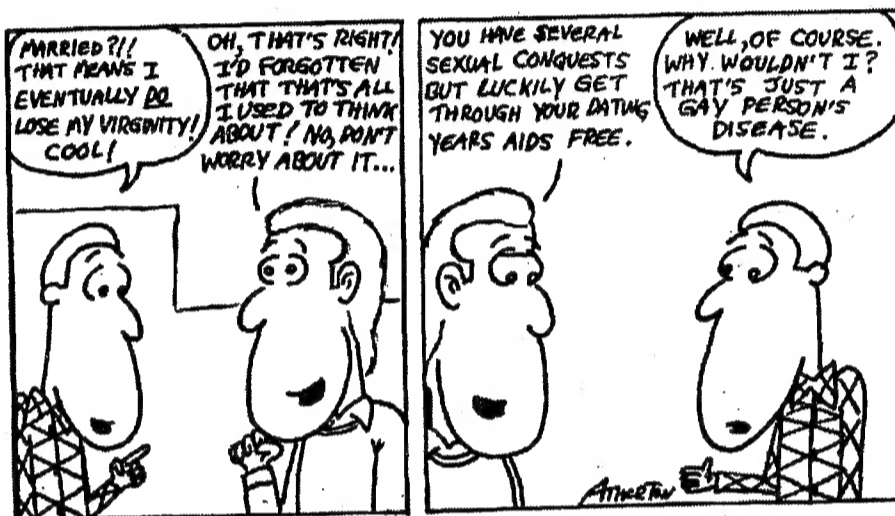

The proceeds for the show will benefit Omaha's Youth Guidance Programs and is co-sponsored by Z-92 and Spaghetti Works.

The show is not recommended for children under 12.

Mavs Plan Strategy Against ND

By MATT CONKLIN

The UNO Maverick football team looks to halt another losing streak when it takes on the Sioux of North Dakota Saturday at 7 p.m. at Al Caniglia Field.

The Mavs enter the game with a 1-4 record of in the North Central Conference (NCC) and 2-5 overall. They are coming off a 50-10 loss to South Dakota State last Saturday.

The Sioux are ranked 11th in the NCAA Division II poll with a 4-1 record in the NCC and 5-1 overall. Like UNO, though, they are also coming off a loss, a 20-7 defeat to the Augustana Vikings.

North Dakota will run from an I-formation, sometimes changing to a one back, two tight-end formation, UNO Coach Tom Mueller said.

Mueller said the player the Mavs will have to contain is Shannon Burnell, the Sioux's two-time all-American running back.

"Stopping Burnell is the key," Mueller said.

Burnell is North Dakota's career rushing leader and is averaging 113.3 yards per game.

Lady Mavs Ready For New Season

By TIM ROHWER

The Lady Mavs basketball players begin practice for the coming season next week. Listening to Coach Cherri Mankenberg, though, it sounds like the easiest part of their training.

"They started working on their pre-season training back on Sept. 8, and every Monday and Wednesday, they've been running and weight lifting from about 2:45 p.m. to 5 p.m.," she said. "Each Friday at 6:30 a.m., they've been lifting weights for about an hour."

Mankenberg added that the team has also done aerobic workouts, plus some time in the swimming pool. It's not the kind of swimming most people do.

"They actually do running in the pool," she said. "They do 30-second sprints in the deep end wearing a weighted vest."

Mankenberg said the workouts are important if players want to succeed on the court.

"You have to establish a work ethic," she said. "We require the kids to be disciplined so when the regular practice begins, they will be in basketball conditions."

When regular practice begins on Oct. 30, Mankenberg welcomes two returning starters and five letterwinners.

The two starters, Aimee Noel and Roxanne Wiles, did not play last season because of injuries.

"Aimee had a knee injury, while Roxanne broke a bone in her foot," Mankenberg said. "But they are much improved and I credit that to their off season workout. In fact, Aimee turned in the best mile and a half during these workouts."

Noel and Wiles were starters on the 1991-92 squad in which Noel averaged 9.5 points per game, while Wiles had 13.1 points per game.

Besides the seven players who return, five freshmen and three transfers will wear Lady Mav jerseys for the first time.

One of the transfers is Michelle Spetman, a 5-11 forward/center, who played at Texas Christian University, a NCAA Division I school, Mankenberg said.

Despite last season's 4-14 record in the North Central Conference, Mankenberg said she feels the Lady Mavs could be in the running for the top spot.

"North Dakota has everybody back, but after that I think it's wide open," she said. "If we get the right chemistry, anything can happen."

Mankenberg says no one can say they are not working for it.

"I'm very pleased with their commitment," she said. "We want to be the best, but it doesn't just happen. You have to work for it. There is no time off. If you are sitting down on your butt, there is someone out there who wants to beat you."

Shires Confident of Regionals Victory

Lady Mavs Improving

By TIM ROHWER

How important is this weekend's action for the Lady Mav volleyball team?

"It's triple important," Coach Rose Shires said.

UNO plays St. Cloud State tonight in the UNO Fieldhouse at 7 p.m. and Mankato State Saturday in the Fieldhouse at 6 p.m.

Shires said the games not only mean a lot in the North Central Conference (NCC) and national rankings, but also in the regional standings.

The regionals are the key, she said.

"We are in the North Central Region, and four teams from there go to the nationals," Shires said. "Right now, we are fourth in the region, tied with St. Cloud State. Mankato State is third. It really matters how we do in the region. If we can beat both teams, they will be big wins."

UNO comes into this weekend's play with an overall record of 14-5 and 3-2 in the NCC.

St. Cloud State leads the NCC with a 5-0 record and 12-7 overall. Mankato State is 2-3 in the NCC and 18-3 overall.

Last week, UNO beat Augustana and South Dakota State. Despite those two wins, the Lady Mavs dropped in this week's NCAA Division II rankings from 11th to 12th place.

"I guess it matters who you play," Shires said. "Last week, we didn't play any ranked teams above us."

Shires said both opponents are formidable.

"Concerning St. Cloud State, I knew they were an up and coming team, though I was a bit surprised when they beat North Dakota State recently," she said. "I knew they were good and have all six starters from last year returning."

The Huskies beat North Dakota State last Saturday in five games. The Bison are ranked fifth in the Division II poll.

"Across the board, St. Cloud State is much bigger than we are. They are definitely one of the best teams we'll play. They're very consistent," Shires said. "But, we won't change our style of play. We will continue to play our fast-paced offense."

The Mavericks of Mankato State come into Saturday's play ranked 14th in the Division II poll.

"Mankato State started off the season really well. I think they started off 16-0, though they've struggled a bit lately," Shires said. "We can't take them lightly. They're big, though not quite as fast as we are."

Shires said she is confident the Lady Mavs can win both games.

"I think our defense and blocking will set the pace," she said. "Our players are continuously making improvements, and we're happy with their progress. We're still making steps toward improvements, we're not standing still."

UNO leads in the all-time series against both schools. The Lady Mavs lead 25-7 against St. Cloud State and 14-3 against Mankato State.

One of Shires' key players, senior outside hitter Laura Monahan was named both NCC and Nebraska Division II player of the week Wednesday..

Monahan recorded 28 kills and a .323 hitting percentage in leading the Lady Mavs to their two victories last week.

National League Too Flawed for Series

Just a few hits and misses running through my mind during the World Series.

Forget about all the controversy concerning the North American Free Trade Agreement, most patriotic Americans are spitting fire over the fact that the Toronto Blue Jays are about to win their second World Series.

It's absolutely ridiculous to listen to these pinheads who believe the Blue Jays have no business in the Series. You would think Somali warlord Aidid was batting clean-up.

Where were these fine, outstanding citizens when foreign golfers were winning the U.S. Open? Where were the dittoheads when Australia won the America's Cup in yachting?

If these ignorant sports fans had their way, the Philadelphia Phillies would be playing the Little League team from Chinese Taipei. The Dream Team would be mopping up the floor with the Angola national basketball team.

If you are one of the great protectors of America's pastime who is repulsed by the Blue Jays pouring champagne on each other just remember two things. The Canadian National Anthem beats ours, and how many times has an American hockey team won the Stanley Cup?

Having to watch pitchers try and hit during the Series is just further evidence of why the National League should switch to the designated hitter.

Here's the worst scenario in baseball provided by, where else, the National League.

The number eight batter in the line-up steps into the batter's box with two on, two outs. What's this? The batter is being intentionally walked to bring up the pitcher batting .041 lifetime.

"And it's one, two, three strikes he's out at the ol' ball game."

Final Meet Slated

The Lady Mav cross country team is running in its final regular season meet today at Augustana College in Sioux Falls, S.D.

The Lady Mavs will then have a week off before competing in the North Central Conference/NCAA-II Regional meet at South Dakota University on Nov. 6.

The Sioux offense has three other players to watch, Mueller said. These include two-year starting running back Ross Almlie, and wide receiver Aaron Schramm.

The Sioux quarterback is Clay Wagner, a first-year starter.

"He (Wagner) has done pretty good running the offense," Mueller said.

North Dakota's defense is a three-four base, meaning three down linemen and four linebackers.

Even though the Sioux have only one returning starter, free safety Bret Hanson, Mueller said they may have the top defense in the NCC.

North Dakota's defense is ranked seventh in the nation on scoring defense and 21st in overall defense, despite allowing 369 yards to Augustana last week.

Injuries are taking a toll on the Mavericks.

Mueller said the team's leading rusher, Lamont White, will probably not play in Saturday's game. White injured his left thigh during the loss to South Dakota State, and is listed as day to day for returning.

White joins fellow running back, Maurad Cave, on the bench. Cave, the team's leading scorer, injured the anterior cruciate ligament in his right knee two weeks ago at Morningside College.

Freshman Matt Hazen will start at running back for the Mavs, Mueller said, adding that defensive cornerback Travis Washington will switch to running back for added depth.

"With injuries you end up moving people around a little bit," Mueller said.

Josh Luedtke again will be the starting quarterback for UNO. The junior from Omaha Creighton Prep is coming off one of his best games statistically, completing 20 of 36 passes for 226 yards and one touchdown against South Dakota State.

Mueller said UNO has one advantage in that the game is played at home. The Mavs' only conference win this year came at their last home appearance on Oct. 2, a 37-18 win against St. Cloud State.

"We gave a good effort the last time we were home," Mueller said. "I can't see any reason why that should be any different this time."

Saturday's game is the start of what could be the toughest part of the UNO's schedule, he added.

"Three of the four teams we have coming up, Mankato State (Nov. 13), Northern Colorado (Oct. 30), and North Dakota (Saturday) are the top three teams in the league," Mueller said.

Green Receives Laurels

Sonia Green, director of UNO's Health, Physical Education and Recreation Department, will be awarded the Lady Mav Club's Distinguished Person of the Year at the UNO Hall of Fame banquet on Nov. 10.

Green helped start women's athletics at UNO in 1969 and the program is celebrating its 25th anniversary this year.

Luke Coniglio, owner of Central Park

Pharmacies and a longtime booster of UNO athletics, will be honored as the Maverick Club's Man of the Year.

The banquet's main event will be the induction of former athletic director Don Leahy, former volleyball player Kathy Knudsen and the late Ryan Kaufman, former national wrestling champion, into UNO's Hall of Fame.
